The option for the Do-not-call registry is great for those who do not wish to get calls from telemarketers. I understand the reasoning for the revisions of the TCPA, but I also think it will just hinder communication and create another rule to the other million rules we have to follow. Though, receiving in writing that the subscriber agrees to be contacted by that seller and including the telephone number to which the calls may be placed can help to weed out unnecessary phone calls to those who are not interested. I agree with the Commission's expressed concern a few years ago that requiring consent where EBR's already exist could hinder communications between those businesses and their customers. I suppose that either way, everyone will adjust to the new rule.
